

I went to subscription radio simply because a few companies totally control all stations in Detroit and the quality, due to a lack of true competition, is beyond poor.

Local radio in this market cannot get any worse. The first priority of the FCC should be measures to open competition, not entertain ideas how to sifle it. Competition would lead to better local radio.

I should have the option to decide if I want to purchase services such as XM radio. The marketplace should decide if local services should be included in a subsription service, not an FCC panel.

Michael Tucker